Back-to-School Savings for the Classroom and Dorm Room

If you're looking for good buys at really good prices, your local resale/thrift shops are a one-stop shopping spot for clothes, household items, small appliances, second hand furniture, and computers.

EVER WONDER WHY YOUR EMAILS GO UNANSWERED?

While there can be any number of reasons, one of them might be because you didn't put something in the subject line, or you used a title of your attachment that was a number. A lot of emails get deleted or are not even delivered when there is no subject line and attachments get overlooked when they have only a generic or program generated name.

There are some basic rules to sending emails, and though a lot of them are very business focused, they also apply to everyday use too.

Getting the BACK-TO-SCHOOL State of Mind

The Staples® commercial called it the most wonderful time of the year—and while it may not be as good as Christmas, it can be enjoyable if you prepare. Here are some tips that parents can make going back to school less stressful and enjoyable.

For grade-school kids: start two weeks ahead of time.

- Reestablish routines—bedtime, medications, and mealtimes
- Give short writing and math assignments
- Talk to them about their expectations and let them know yours

Don't worry if they don't offer a lot. Dream with them about the possibilities—they may not seem to be listening, but they are.

For college students:

- Buy supplies in bulk—take a 2 month supply of detergent with leave the rest home
- Buy only white towels and wash cloths—so they can be washed with the white clothes
- Name-stamp or Sharpie® your name in all of your clothes
- Use a lingerie bag for underwear and socks—keeps items from going missing
- If you don't want to iron, flatten your clothes under the mattress
- Start your coupon collection and use them for discounts on food and local services
- Familiarize yourself with local taxi and transit by putting those numbers in your phone

GOING NATURAL

Since “press and curl” is a distant memory for some and mystery to others, going natural may just be a solution to the expense and time of getting your hair done.

Natural hair is a multi-million dollar industry with major product lines. The consumer community is active and supportive with hair care “how to videos”, and support for surviving the big chop. Almost anyone who has natural hair has a story and is willing to share. Talking about our hair is good and Going Natural can be a good thing.
